Pym hoping to repair relations

Mr Francis Pym, the Foreign Secretary, yesterday said he was confident that Britain could reestablish good relations with Latin America in the wake of the Falklands crisis (David Cross writes). "Whereas they (the Latin American countries) were very anxious about the events on the Falkland Islands and worried about our task force and the repossession of the islands by force, they were equally critical of Argentina for having used force in the first place," he told the BBC.
